"Cooking Up Surprise." "We're cooking up a fine surprise for the Western Union officials," said one of the speakers. Blacklisting, said to have been practiced by the telegraph companies. was attacked by S. J. Small, a former international officer of the union. Blacklisting, said Small, has caused the suffering and ultimate death of hundreds of operators.

"There is one Washington operator buried in a cemetery here." he 3914 said, "the father of five children, and neither his wife nor the children know their right names." It was pointed out that when an operator is discharged he is blacklisted and unable to secure a position in any other telegraph company in the country under his correct name.' It was predicted by union officials today that Congress would take no action within the next forty-eight hours to avert the strike.
